The farmer should not be blamed if he forbids the city hunter to shoot quail, says an exchange. The bird feeds on the grain fields and the farmer rightly thinks he should enjoy the game himself. If quail are not shot at, they do not fly away every time a man approaches. Most farmers look upon quail as sort of domestic bird and it is natural that they should resent the trespassing of the hunter who shoots often and frightens the best, and in many places, the only game to be had in the country.

Small-Pox in Kentucky.
Dr. J. N. McCormack Secretary of the State Board of Health, says there are small-pox now in ten counties of the State and thinks it wise to adopt stringent measures to prevent the spread of the disease.

Dr. McCormack believes that every county board of health and every county official will co-operate with the State Board and prevent the spread of the disease. While he did not want to appear sensational, he wanted the public to understand that the situation was extremely critical.

According to the figures given by Dr. McCormack, there are 80 cases at Jackson, in Breathitt county; eleven or more in and about Marion in Crittenden county; about twenty-five in Washington county; several in Bell county, and several cases among the negroes at Lexington. Dr. McCormick says if the proper steps are taken at once there need be no fear of the disease spreading.

Suppose Schley is acquitted; What then? His case was essentially a national one, involving the reputation of the United States Navy. Is it fair that he should have been compelled to spend the savings of a lifetime in order to vindicate this? Should not Congress come to his rescue?
